From the desk of the "Security Genius"

It's that time of the year again when spring is upon us and I'm getting ready to head to the ISC (International Security Conference) show in Las Vegas. This show features some of the most sophisticated security products made in the world. I'm like a kid in a candy store and love to try out all the new security gizmos. My all time favorite was the "Fogger" security machine box that instantly filled a room with smoke and completely disoriented you. This little box was activated by a security switch and "poof" 3 seconds later you couldn't even see your hand in front of your face. Of course I had to try the demonstration several times.

This year I'm looking forward to Smartphone apps with integration to CCTV, security systems, access control and video monitoring. This stuff is so cool! This month we are rolling out a "state of the art system" that turns your Smartphone into a virtual keypad and camera monitor that updates status of conditions of your home or business. Through your Smartphone you can see exactly what's going in your home or business with a simple icon click. You can playback recorded video, turn on lights, open doors and receive text message anytime your system is armed or disarmed. This can all be done for less than a cost of a pack of gum a day! STAY TUNED!

Words of the Month

Panhandle: A narrow strip broader area, as in Alaska, Virginia.

of territory projecting from a larger, Idaho, Oklahoma, Texas, and West Virginia.

Botulism:

Botulism is caused by botulinum toxin, a natural poison produced by certain bacteria in the Clostridium genus. Exposure to the botulinum toxin occurs mostly from eating contaminated food, or in infants, from certain clostridia growing in the intestine. Botulinum toxin blocks motor nerves' ability to release acetylcho-line, the neurotransmitter that relays nerve signals to muscles, and flaccid paralysis occurs. As botulism progresses, the muscles that control the airway and breathing fail.

MARCH JOKE

Great Writer There was once a young man who, in his youth, professed his desire to become a great writer.

When asked to define "great" he said, "I want to write stuff that the whole world will read, stuff that people will react to on a truly emotional level, stuff that will make them scream, cry, howl in pain and anger!"

He now works for Microsoft, writing error messages!

Amazon Cuts ties with affiliates in another state over TAXES

The ongoing debate about whether or not to levy sales tax on online purchases got another talking point yesterday, as Amazon.com reacted to one such law in Colorado by completely dropping all of its affiliates in the state.

The Colorado state legislature had enacted the law, which went into effect last week, as an attempt to earn sales tax from Colorado-based businesses using Amazon to connect with buyers around the world. Unlike other states, Colorado gave merchants two options: Either add the sales tax to their goods or send customers an annual accounting of how much each customer owes the state in sales tax.

However, Amazon decided that the new laws were too burdensome and Byzantine, and so decided — just as they did in North Carolina and Rhode Island — to end their relationship with effected affiliates.

In their letter to affiliates to share the bad news, Amazon writes:

The regulations are burdensome and no other state has similar rules. The new regulations do not require online retailers to collect sales tax. Instead, they are clearly intended to increase the compliance burden to a point where online retailers will be induced to "voluntarily" collect Colorado sales tax — a course we won't take....

There is a right way for Colorado to pursue its revenue goals, but this new law is a wrong way. As we repeatedly communicated to Colorado legislators, including those who sponsored and supported the new law, we are not opposed to collecting sales tax within a constitutionally-permissible system applied even-handedly. The US Supreme Court has defined what would be constitutional, and if Colorado would repeal the current law or follow the constitutional approach to collection, we would welcome the opportunity to reinstate Colorado-based Associates.

According to reports, the move cuts about 4,200 affiliates from Amazon's roster.

"There are a lot of people who are going to be hurt, and that's a shame," Braunstein said.

Not surprisingly, this has turned into a political hot button in Colorado, with Democrats, who backed the bill accusing Amazon of "corporate bullying," and Republicans telling the Dems "We told you so."

"It's exactly what we said would happen," Republican Assemblyman Mike May said. "They're going to put people out of work. It's a game of chicken with people and their jobs, and they lost."

A similar measure is currently being considered in Virginia, where lawmakers believe they'll generate millions of dollars in annual tax revenue. Amid all this finger-pointing, where do you think the fault, if any, lies in this situation?
